

MAGAZINE

INTERIORS   ARCHITECTURE   TRAVEL   EVENTS   CURRENT ISSUE

Search

BE AS PRODUCTIVE OR AS PLAYFUL AS YOU WANT IN CLEVER,
stylishly designed
Bangkok hotel rooms.

PLAY ON #ATTHEMOXY
moxy

Wave Villa

April 30, 2025

Featuring a new undulating concrete roof, the re-envisioned house by renowned studio ARRCC offers interiors with a fluid, open-plan layout that connects the gardens and terraces to panoramic views of Cape Town's Atlantic Seaboard.

The house consists of two main wings: the living and entertainment areas and the sleeping quarters. The top level boasts the most impressive sea views and includes the main living spaces. While the lower level accommodates three guest bedrooms, staff quarters, a gym, a study, a games room, and another lounge that opens seamlessly onto the pool terrace. The main bedroom occupies the upper level of the second wing.

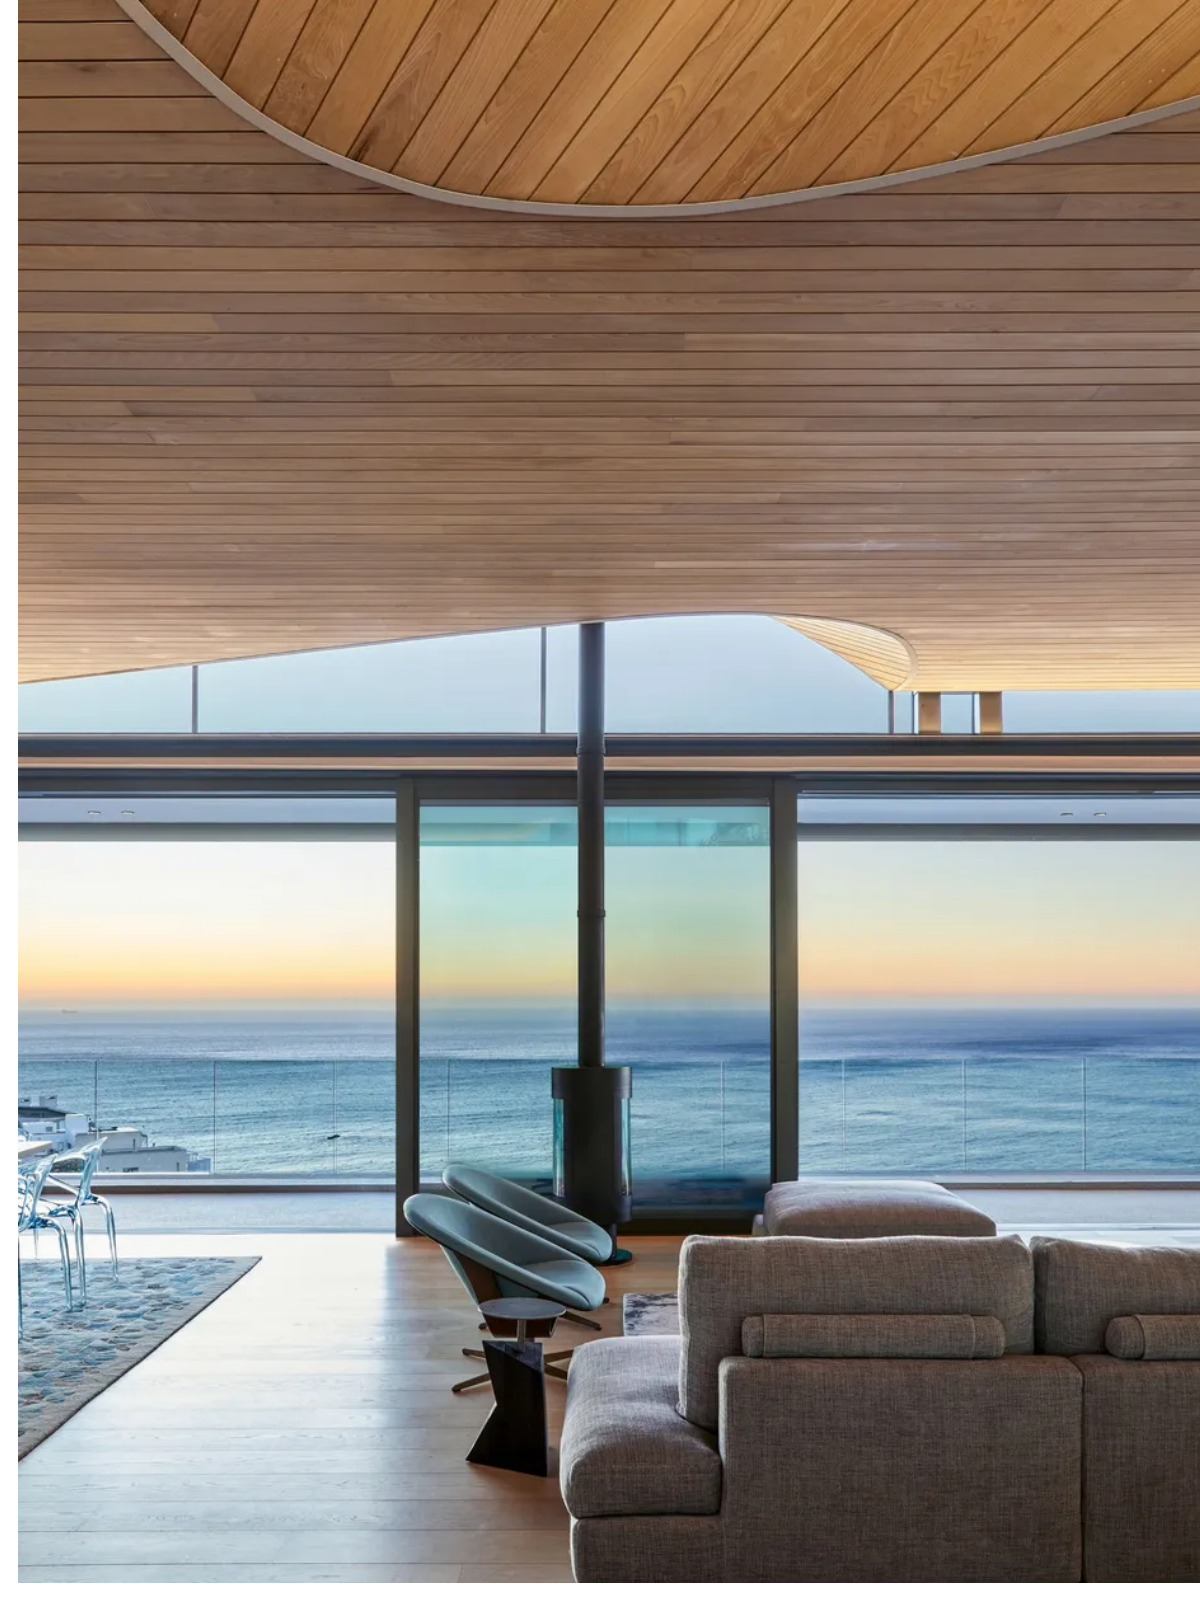

From the street, only a tantalizing glimpse of the sculptural form of the roof is visible beyond the entrance. This concrete shell's curvaceous, billowing shape takes inspiration from the waves of the ocean and the mountains behind the house, but it also has a practical rationale. Internally, the ceiling "pushes up" above clerestory windows to frame views of Table Mountain and Lion's Head above and behind the house.

To the front, it rises to scoop in expanses of sky. These focal points enhance the home's connection to its beautiful natural setting and draw natural light deep into its interior. Similarly, the roof of the master bedroom in the adjacent wing has been peeled back and lifted upwards to capture the views.

The upstairs living space has been transformed into a light, transparent, pavilion-like structure flooded with natural light and fresh air, orientated to connect with the garden at the back of the house and allowing views of the sea to flow through the interiors. Light oak paneling on the ceilings, walls, and floors provides softness and warmth, while exposed concrete elements provide a gritty contrast, and Cape Granite resonates with the mountainside setting. The ceiling's design "pushes up" above clerestory windows to frame views of Table Mountain and Lion's Head above and behind the house. This level includes the open-plan lounge and dining areas flowing out onto a terrace through floor-to-ceiling glass doors.

The main kitchen overlooks the back of house pool while the custom-made bespoke bar area is characterised by Cape Granite, timber, brass, and copper elements.

A winding "orange peel" staircase mediates the connection between the living and bedroom wings while creating a sculptural architectural element at the entrance. A restrained and consistent palette of natural materials has been applied throughout the interiors, creating a tactile but neutral backdrop to enhance the colour pop of the views of the landscape. Light oak paneling on ceilings, walls, and floors provides softness and warmth, while exposed concrete elements provide a gritty contrast, and Cape Granite resonates with the mountainside setting.

The roof of the main bedroom in the adjacent wing has been peeled back and lifted upwards to capture and maximise the views. In the main bedroom en-suite ARRCC applied a consistent palette of natural materials throughout the interiors.

Photography Greg Cox
Architecture & Interior Design ARRCC

< Older Post

Newer Post >

SHARE THIS

Popular Posts

Healing in Motion

Designed by Davide Macullo Architectures, the Veterinary Hospital in Tirana is a bold expression of architecture as emotion—where

Lisbon Design Week: A Community of Voices, Values and Vision

In collaboration with O Apartamento, a multidisciplinary agency focused on hospitality, travel, art, and interior design, the Lisbon

Signature architecture at the foot of the Great Wall: the Modern Charm of Commune by the Great Wall

Nestled at the foot of Shuiquan Mountain, just an hour's drive from Beijing, Commune by the Great Wall stands as a testament to

G&G _ Magazine

About

Readers

Partners

Advertise

Contact

Connect With Us

Past issues

May 2025

Delightful Mocha Mousse

Autumn 2024

Paris Design Week

The World of Tomorrow

More

Search